Sanctuary of Apollon Hylates

Apollon Hylates, God of the Woodland, was the protector of Kourion, and it is believed that he was worshipped at the site from the 8th century BC to the 4th century AD.

His sanctuary was an important religious centre and underwent many extensions and alterations in different periods.

Initially, the site consisted of a temple (traces of which survive in the foundations of the present temple), a circular monument, and a formalized Archaic Altar and Precinct.

During the Roman period, the site was extended with the addition of the south and north buildings, which may have been used to display votives or the accommodation of visitors. Terracotta figurines and pottery accumulated in the temple from the 5th century BC to the Roman period were buried in the votive pit.

The majority of the monuments - as they can be seen today belong to the site's 1st century AD restorations and consist of Apollo's temple (which has been partly restored), pilgrim halls, the 'palaestra' (where athletes exercised and played games), a bath complex, and a holy precinct.

Commandaria Wine Route

The route through 14 Commandaria villages goes back to 1192 AD when the knights of St. John were perfecting the production of the world's first named wine.

The sweet wine took its identity from the place it was mainly produced - 'La Grande Commanderie' - which is the area now known as Kolossi.

So famed was Commandaria that it even won in the first recorded wine tasting competition - the 'Battle of the Wines' - which took place in the 13th century and was held by the French king Philip Augustus.

A further popular site is also the Medieval Castle of Kolossi - or 'La Grande Commanderie' as it was once known.

The area is also home to the Kouris Dam, the biggest in Cyprus, and an important wetland.
